

Review of: "Conflict Resolution Applications to Peace Studies"

Ruchi Sinha<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Tata Institute of Social Sciences

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article "Conflict Resolution Applications to Peace Studies" presents a narrative woven with vivid imagery and interdisciplinary methodology, exploring conflict resolution within peace studies. However, its journalistic style lacks a substantive gaze for critical analysis. While the article effectively highlights the strengths of mediation and transformative conflict resolution, it falls short in acknowledging potential challenges or limitations. Real-world examples, like the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, enrich the discussion, yet the call to explore criticisms of transformative approaches is left unaddressed. The conclusion employs a poignant metaphor, but the overall lack of critical depth suggests the piece may be more akin to an assignment than a scholarly examination, offering insightful recommendations but stopping short of a thorough exploration of conflict dynamics.