Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article has a well-defined scope and objectives. It aims to explore the impact of colonial rule on kingship in Akoko-Yoruba, focusing on the reinterpretation of the karaole form of salutation and the dynamics of power politics. This clarity helps readers understand the purpose of the research.

However, the discussion of the issue would become even more interesting if supplemented with the following elements:

1. Uncertainty in Research Methodology:

The article mentions the use of historical analysis method and data collection from primary and secondary sources, but it does not provide explicit details about the research methodology used. Information on how data was collected and analyzed would enhance the transparency and credibility of the research.

1. Material Aspects that Need to be Added:

The article provides a good understanding of the impact of colonial rule on kinship institutions in Akoko-Yoruba. However, to enhance the depth and completeness of the article, several aspects can be added:

1). Specific Case Examples and Evidence:

Adding specific case examples or concrete evidence can provide a stronger foundation for the arguments presented in the article. For instance, describing specific historical events or quoting relevant letters, speeches, or historical records.

2). Impact of Colonial Policies:

The article could provide more detail on specific colonial policies that directly affected the royal institution and policies that led to the restructuring of traditional power. This would provide a deeper understanding of the dynamics of the changes that occurred.

3). Role of Society in Preserving Traditional Power:

Delving into how the local community responded to these changes and their role in preserving or altering traditional power could add a crucial social dimension to the analysis.

4). Discussion on Long-Term Impacts:

Expanding the discussion on how these changes impacted Akoko-Yoruba society in the long term could include aspects such as cultural, economic, and social changes.

5). Impact of Western Education:

Going deeper into the influence of Western education on traditional institutions and how educational ideologies affected the community's perception of traditional rulers could be a beneficial addition.

The addition of these elements can provide the depth and completeness needed to enrich the article and ensure a better understanding of the historical context and its impact on the Akoko-Yoruba community
