The paper deals with important issue of the impact of CPTED on livability of the neighborhoods. The topic is crucial and vital. The general research framework is correctly designed. Mix methods approach is definitely an advantage of the paper. However I have some remarks:

- The extension of literature review on CPTED bottlenecks is needed, especially with respect to implementation phase
- More information (metadata) is needed both for qualitative and quantitative data, the information on the sample and respondents is lacking.
- I suggest expanding the results section. With respect to qualitative results – the analysis is very simple based on few distributions, at least disaggregation on gender, age, level of education is needed. Referring to qualitative data only conclusions are presented, more detailed analysis is needed, also with citations.
- Discussion of results is needed, that is a comparison of the results of the study with those of other researchers.
