I appreciate the author's efforts to study the implementation of e-learning during COVID-19.

However, the paper lacks some crucial things.

Firstly, the introduction is too short.

Secondly, the author does not use adequate and relevant literature or references.

In Discussion, the author should have searched or examined whether their findings are aligned with existing studies on the implementation of e-learning during COVID-19.

I also conducted research on teaching and learning during the COVID-19 pandemic, and the paper is published in the Qualitative Report journal.
