

Review of: "“Saving the Forest” with a REDD+ Project: Socio-Ecological Repercussions on Indigenous People in Cambodia"

Gyanendra Karki

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article is very contemporary and relevant. REDD+ design and implementation are at a crossroads. The interface between people and forests is well speculated on in the article. I believe the research paper should be published and the facts should be brought into the consideration of governments and project developers. However, there is a need for using a statistically justifiable methodology. It's especially crucial when the article is making critical comments on government/s.