The paper is organized logically and the arguments are presented very clearly and in a scholarly way. I admire the author's style in presenting this controversial topic in a very interesting manner. I could relate so much with the so many similar cases happening in our country and in many other countries shifting focus on the more highly demanded crops at the global level.

As it is, for me the paper can be published already. I don't know if it will be possible for the author to compare the current analysis with published literature on banana, pineapple, and similar crops.
