This is an interesting work and I read it with a great enthusiasm. The author tried to reveal some important insights which may contribute to the understanding of the ever ongoing refugee crises. Although the author tried to explore case through a qualitative approach, I am not entirely sure if s/he aimed at producing an empirically scientific research work, or the broader general audience as we see in conventional magazines. If it targets the scientific community in general, the methodological concerns come immediately and it needs a cover up for that. Otherwise, the author may go for a traditional audience-based magazine/featurettes. The authors may also consider adding a few verbatims to depict the stories of the participants. All the best.
