

Review of: "Agritourism: a source for socio-economic transformation in developing economies"

Emilio Carral¹

¹ Universidad de Santiago de Compostela

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Interesting article, a useful in the field of agritourism by the great importance of sustainability in this field, and really, in the relationship with the local community implications and their cornerstone role: control of natural and social resources uses and benefits share from this activity. In this way, I think the manuscript would be improve if the authors "spend" a bit more time in a deeper discussion about different implications of agritourism activities from the literature review. In the present form, the article is very informative and illustrative, but in my opinion, so much descriptive. I think the authors could enhance the information analysis to detect the practical problems, the commons ones for the different countries and the challenges derived. If the authors could introduce this holistic perspective, I think the manuscript would improve its value.

This review was done from the former article version, and in the latest one, I saw that some parts of my proposals, (countries whole analysis) was contemplate. But following this way, I think a deeper discussion about common problems and challenges with agritourism would be useful.