

Review of: "The Support and Rehabilitation of Refugees – Personal Opinion and Experience"

Nina Bagdasarova<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> American University of Central Asia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

For me this text is a cry for equality and dignity for all human beings around the world. It is a great collection of the cases that may enlighten people around the world about refugees' situations. The factual fabric of the text and author's efforts to help people are amazing. As far as I get this text is just a kind of essay and not the academic article, so I will not comment on a lack of theoretical framework and analysis in this text. Still, I believe it would be extremely important if the author provides us with his opinion about systemic flaws that keep people suffering. In the commentary section there are insights about general attitude of the authorities towards the harsh situation of the people in some areas of East Africa and other places. Also author let us understand ( at least I took it this way!) that the problem cannot be solved by individuals and charity of very few enthusiasts. Here some social theory would be very helpful to clarify socio-economic processes that make such situations possible. I believe some initiative from social scientists to complement these facts with some theoretical analysis and interpretations would be really great and it would transform these materials in even more powerful instrument of critique of current global inequality.