The review should be divided into sub-topics such as empirical use, bioactivities or pharmacological effects, and the chemical constituents. So, the structure of the paper needs to be revised.

Mentioning the scientific name is necessary in some parts of the paper. Local names are difficult to understand for readers in other countries.

It's better to divide the constituents that consist in plants into primary and secondary metabolites.

Figures of plants are needed, along with explanations about how the plants are traditionally used in the country.

More discussion and explanation about the relation between constituents and activities is needed.
