

Review of: "Characterization of Workplace Violence in Healthcare Workers at an Emergency Room in Bogotá, Colombia"

Laura Hrehova

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I am grateful for the opportunity to review the manuscript "Characterization of Workplace Violence in Healthcare Workers at an Emergency Room in Bogotá, Colombia." The flow of the text is easy to follow, and the tables are well-designed.

However, the below-mentioned issues need to be addressed:

- The clinical relevance of the findings (at least shortly) should also be better explained in the abstract.
- As mentioned in "Limitations", it is a small sample; thus, the clinical relevancy of the study is small as well.
- Most participants are 18 to 30 years old and, therefore, should be referred to as "younger patients." Mostly, it is related to students, interns, and residents who have practical experience of less than five years.
- It would be suitable to add to the study a comparison with a group of older and attested participants working in the same department. The relevancy would be higher.
- I recommend elaborating further on the implementation of acquired results into practice.