Review of: "Web-Based Crime Management System for Samara City Main Police Station"

This is a very technical description of the development of a web-based crime reporting and management system for a police station in one Ethiopian city. I am not sure who the intended audience is. I believe the most appropriate audience is IT professionals involved in similar software development projects. This is not a research paper per se. It does not appeal to a wide audience of people interested in research on policing. It is a narrowly written and very technical paper that appears to cater to a small and specific audience. The writing is also full of errors. The paper should be carefully copy-edited to improve writing quality.
