Dear Author(s)

I have reviewed your manuscript.

However, I am sharing my viewpoints; if you can cover these issues, it will enhance the quality of your article.

In the abstract, you did not mention anything regarding methodology; though it is a review paper, you need to write something about the nature of your study.

The introduction part is crucial for a paper. In your introduction, you are requested to develop three essential issues (problem statement, research gap, and recent citations). Most of the citations in the introduction part need to be updated. When you read recent papers, your problem statement and research gap will strengthen. You also need to add the contribution part in the last part of the introduction.

Before describing the study's concept, it will be better to describe the theoretical assumptions, as; the research concept should come from theory.

When you describe the study's concept, most references are not updated; you might not get the current scenario of these concepts.

As an author, when you write the discussion part of an article, you need to put your findings first and then show the consistency or inconsistency of your results with other researchers' findings. If you get an inconsistent finding, you must give a proper justification which is missing in the manuscript.

Overall, it is a good attempt and best of luck with your manuscript.
