

Peer Review

Review of: "Creating a Child-Centered Playroom for Marshallese Children"

Afsoon Hassani Mehraban¹

1. Occupational therapy, Iran University of Medical Sciences, Iran, Islamic Republic of

This article has an interesting subject, but it is like a report article about Marshallese children, preparing a playroom, and introducing different types of play therapy for children.

I recommend to the authors:

- to present their research by choosing one design, like a pre-post design, and examining the selected approach with some students, of course using valid and reliable assessment tools. If there is a problem with doing this, they can summarize the present article as a report article and just emphasize the cultural differences in choosing the place and toys for the playroom and also the challenges of making relationships with the caregivers and parents of children.
- to provide the process of toy selection in the article
- to highlight the cultural differences clearly
- What are the parents' preferences for their child?
- How can teachers and school administrators help in this process?

Declarations

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.