

Review of: "The Relative Importance of the SDG Pillars"

Tymon Zielinski¹

¹ The Institute of Oceanology of the Polish Academy of Sciences

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I find this paper very interesting and inspiring for my own work, and I am sure the results presented in the paper should have a wide group of recipients who will be able to use the information and results in their own research. The approach to SDGs is, for me, unusual and thus very interesting and, once again, inspiring. The structure of the paper secures a “good reading” of the paper and makes it easy to follow. The methodology is consistent and well presented, and so are the result descriptions. I find this approach different, since usually we don't get detailed (per region/country) evaluations of the SDG implementation success/actions. The conclusions are insightful and interesting and show room for changes and modifications of our approach towards global sustainability.