The article begins by providing a brief overview of the socio-economic background of the Tambaksari District and the Christian community in Surabaya. It then discusses the theoretical framework and literature review, which provide a solid foundation for the study.

The study uses a quantitative research approach, and the authors collected data from 50 Christian teachers in the Tambaksari District of Surabaya, Indonesia, using a questionnaire survey. The study's findings suggest that there is a significant influence of socio-economic conditions of parents on the personality of Christian teachers in the Tambaksari District.

However, there are some limitations to this study. The sample size is relatively small, and the study only includes Christian teachers, which limits the generalizability of the findings. Additionally, the authors did not provide a clear explanation of how they measured personality traits.

Overall, the article provides valuable insights into the influence of socio-economic conditions of parents on the personality of Christian teachers in the Tambaksari District of Surabaya, Indonesia. However, further research is necessary to validate the findings and to extend the study's scope to a larger and more diverse population.
