'Methodology' can be one of the headings wherein the researcher can talk about the number and type of questions included in the questionnaire, method of data collection, number of responses collected, statistical tools used for the analysis, etc.

Or the existing title 'Data Gathering Instruments' can be rephrased as 'Methodology' and all relevant information can be furnished under.

Research Objectives of the study are to be stated clearly, and to be justified in the discussions/findings section.

Literature review is appropriate but not relevant to the recent times. Since the article is about English Language Teaching and Learning (which is an upgrading area along with technology), articles published in the recent past can be considered for review. So that the identification of research gap will be valid. The purpose of literature review is to identify the research gap which seems to be missing in the report.

Abstract is not focused and to be redrafted with essential details only. Methodology and findings related details are to be minimally used in methodology.

Proofreading has to be done with the help of a language expert. For example, the following sentence, 'Their profiles are discussed in further detail in this section.' does not sound good.
