

Review of: "Examining Water Use and Sanitation Practices in Rural Schools of Chegutu District, Mashonaland West Province, Zimbabwe"

Somayeh Soltani-Gerdefaramarzi¹

¹ Ardakan University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The study examines water use and sanitation practices of selected rural secondary schools in Ward 11 and 29 of Chegutu District in Zimbabwe. For this purpose, a lot of data collection has been done and data analysis has been done using graphs and tables, although statistical analysis has not been done on the results. In other words, are the changes statistically significant or not? The results have been well described, but according to my suggestion, it is better to do statistical analysis if possible and not to be satisfied only with the results obtained from figures, graphs and tables. The conclusion and suggestions section is also well written.

According to the review, the results of the article can be accepted by making general corrections in the analysis section.