Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Clarity of Focus: The title suggests that the paper will cover a wide range of topics, including transaction costs, resource-linking, and hypercompetition in the context of the sharing economy. However, it's crucial to ensure that the paper maintains a clear and focused narrative throughout. It may benefit from clearly defining the scope and boundaries of each perspective to avoid confusion.

Theoretical Framework: It's essential to evaluate the depth and coherence of the theoretical framework used to analyze these perspectives. Are the theories and concepts adequately explained and applied to the sharing economy context? Are there gaps or inconsistencies in the theoretical foundation?

Empirical Evidence: Without access to the paper's content, it's challenging to comment on the specifics of the empirical evidence presented. However, it's critical to assess the quality, relevance, and diversity of the empirical data used to support the various perspectives. Do the findings effectively illustrate the points being made?

Integration of Perspectives: The paper appears to integrate transaction cost theory, resource-linking, and hypercompetition perspectives. It's important to evaluate how these perspectives are integrated and whether the connections between them are well-established. Is there a clear argument for why these perspectives are interconnected in the context of the sharing economy?

Practical Implications: A strong academic paper should not only provide theoretical insights but also offer practical implications for businesses and policymakers. Assess whether the paper effectively translates its findings into actionable recommendations for stakeholders in the sharing economy.

Original Contribution: It's essential to consider whether the paper makes a significant and original contribution to the existing literature. Does it offer novel insights or perspectives that advance our understanding of the sharing economy and its challenges in the changing business environment?

Clarity of Writing: Lastly, evaluate the overall clarity of writing, organization, and presentation of ideas. Are the arguments well-structured and easy to follow? Is the language and terminology used accessible to the target audience?
