

Review of: "Post-Pandemic Reflections from Sub-Saharan Africa: What We Know Now That We Wish We Knew Then"

Ahoma Mbanuzuru¹

¹ Nnamdi Azikiwe University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This work on post-pandemic reflections from Sub-Saharan Africa: what we know now that we wish we knew then is uniquely presented and well researched. Few suggested aspects to be accommodated (if possible) to help for future pandemics will include promoting core principles of Primary Health Care - essential health care, equity, appropriate technology and Community participation/ownership. Need for local production of the diagnostics that was grossly inadequate during the pandemic, leading to the fact that most deaths and morbidity within the pandemic seem not to be properly captured. Separating science from politics has captured the danger of politicization of diseases and health-related events.