It is unclear as to which definition of resilience the author has adopted for the discussion. The discourse is very incoherent and lacks clear focus. The author more or less requests the reader to also read her/his previous paper in conjunction with is one. The writing is neither scientific nor technical and the narrative is inconsistent. What is the research problem, and what exactly is the main message that the author is trying to convey? It may be better for the author to adopt a particular definition of resilience and to discuss the implications in his chosen sector of urban real estate development.
