

Review of: "Significance and its role in the historical constitution and transformation of social reality. A conceptual approach from enactive cognition"

Zhonghua Wu¹

¹ Zhejiang University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I appreciate the author's efforts in exploring the important role of cognitive production significance in the historical constitution and social transformation of the reality. The topic is quite interesting and the theoretical essay is well-structured. Readers can understand how meaning is constructed due to the dynamics between action and cognition in social interactions, notably with the author's step-by-step logical reasoning. It can be seen that the author has a keen perception towards and profound understanding of the conceptual framework he is proposing.

However, all of the references cited are not new enough. The author is expected to update us on how the academic community sees or deals with the issue from a more rigorous and critical perspective. Besides, it is necessary to polish the language as a whole to avoid typing errors, though this doesn't seriously impact the scholarly contribution and value of this paper. Above all, I enjoyed reading this manuscript, and hope it could be a good reference for others.