

Review of: "Choosing Education Abroad: A Parental Perspective in China"

Hao Yao¹

¹ Tongji University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I thought the topic of the article was interesting, but the article did not reflect the research process, and perhaps I understood the article to be a short review. In order to improve the quality of this article, I would make the following suggestions:

1. I think many of the article's points need to be supported by literature or other evidence, for example, the cost of going abroad, the difficulty of obtaining a visa, etc. The article needs to be supplemented with a large amount of literature to support the points.
2. If you can, please add some cases or data, an academic paper has a rigorous form, such as introduction, literature review, methods and data, empirical results, discussion. Of course, if it is only a short review type of article, it may not need a particularly rigorous empirical process.
3. I would like the study to clearly indicate what are the innovations of this study and what are the policy recommendations.