

Review of: "Post-Pandemic Reflections from Sub-Saharan Africa: What We Know Now That We Wish We Knew Then"

Helena Belchior Rocha¹

¹ ISCTE-Instituto Universitário de Lisboa

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article is a very good reflection on the post-pandemic situation in Sub-Saharan Africa. Although it is not an empirical study and only refers to 2 countries, the courage to say things that should be considered in future similar situations is remarkable. Also, separating politics and business from situations of public health, although always linked, is a recommendation that everybody should read about. Therefore, I find this article very pertinent, and, in my perception of what should be a scientific contribution to society, it should be accepted for publication.

Best regards,