

Review of: "An Ontological Turn for Psychology in the age of the Machine and Global Warming"

Jelson Oliveira¹

¹ Pontifícia Universidade Católica de Minas Gerais

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The text is extremely interesting and original, bringing to the academic debate a very important question, linked to the status of science. The theme of the ontology of subjects, in substitution of the ontology of objects, is an instigating way to question the neutrality of science, as the text proposes.