

Review of: "Lived Experience of School Leaders in Supervising during Remote Teaching"

Nureyzwan Sabani

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This research is very good and clear, however, I have a few empty spaces that are still visible, including:

Although the article touches on aspects of supporting struggling students, it could be further enriched by exploring the direct impact of remote teaching on student achievement. Concrete recommendations for educational policy development would also be a valuable addition. Finally, providing a perspective or comparison with school leaders in other countries could provide a global dimension that would enrich this article. With some refinements and further development, this article has the potential to become a powerful resource to support school leaders and remote teaching in the future.