

Review of: "The Impact of Project Financial Subsidies on Project Achievement"

Salma Khan¹

¹ University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The main idea is based on the allowances, the extent to which they have interaction with the communities. The role of the stakeholders is of importance, clearly indicating towards the absence of proper policy framework. The policy termed as Agricultural Extension in the New Millennium: Towards Pluralistic and Demand-driven Services In Malawi has been elaborated in a better way with some examples or references, however, i could not understand the limits as mentioned in the point 10 and the practicability of DSA in point 15 too is a little of confusion to me. Apart from this the remaining points have been mentioned and explained and mentioned well clearly.

The section of the adverse consequences is elaborated with well thorough headings but there is wide range of information that though useful lacks references or sources from which the information is provided. I would recommend that in the conceptual review section the author should try to connect the end of one paragraph with the start of the other paragraph whether in relating to it or contrasting to it.

Highly appreciate the author for their effort of research in the given area of study.

Best

Salma Khan