

Review of: "African languages and COVID-19: Translations and interpretations of COVID-19 information in rural communities in Igbo land, Nigeria"

Yoko Mayuzumi¹

¹ Bunkyo University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This is a valuable paper to consider helping the world community come to a common understanding of how to deal with a virus that has spread globally. The paper's perspective is excellent, but the article's design is immature. The background, issues, objectives, research plan, findings, and discussion chapters could be more specific. If the author wants to submit the paper as a research paper, it should state the attributes of the interviewees (gender, educational background, etc.) and present the level of knowledge of their interpretations. Then it should describe each answer and summarize them in a discussion.

Regarding the interpretation of rural communities in Igbo regarding language and coronaviruses, the number of people who can correctly explain the language of rural communities in Igbo and its interpretation regarding coronaviruses is limited. But this is an important point, and one of the critical points of the research methodology is how to secure these people and interview them.