The idea behind this paper is novel and interesting.

I would strongly encourage the authors to bring substantial alterations to the paper. First, I would clearly define stress incontinence which was treated in your series. It seems you only used questionnaires for diagnosis, which, in my opinion, is not enough.

Second, I would make a clear difference between stress incontinence and OAB syndrome, since you appear to have used questionnaires for both.

Third, you should describe the criteria for success evaluation, I think it should be more than patient satisfaction.

There are some general limits of your study which should be clearly stated, like small series, lack of randomization, lack of statistical analysis, etc.
