

Review of: "Global Governance and Sustainable Development: Lessons from the COVID-19 Pandemic"

Milton Arrieta-López¹

¹ Oakton Community College

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The manuscript primarily focuses on Western countries, which may limit its global applicability. Including more diverse case studies and data from various continents would broaden the scope and relevance of the discussion.

Specific Comments and Suggestions:

1. Inclusion of Statistical Tools: Utilizing statistical charts and graphs would help to visually convey key points and data, making the analysis more accessible.
2. Detailed Proposals for Change: The paper would benefit from more concrete examples and a precise plan for transitioning to sustainable development models.
3. Global Case Studies: Incorporating case studies and data from various countries across continents would help to validate the conclusions and proposed solutions.
4. Clearer Language: Terms like "eradicate the infections" should be revised to more accurate phrases like "control the spread of the virus." Additionally, speculative statements should be substantiated with specific sources or evidence.

This manuscript makes a significant contribution to the discussion on global governance and sustainable development in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic. With some improvements in balance, specificity, and global perspective, it could provide an even more robust and practical framework for researchers and policymakers.