

Peer Review

Review of: "Towards a Definition of Small Literatures"

Maria Chiara Gnocchi¹

1. LILEC - Lingue, letteratura e culture moderne, University of Bologna, Italy

It's a useful and interesting paper whose aim is to review some major conceptualisations of "small literatures". Sometimes it seems more descriptive than critically analytic, but the point of the paper lies precisely in a reasoned comparison. I appreciated the fact that important consideration is given to the historical-political context of small literatures and also to systemic studies and approaches on small literatures proposed by small literatures themselves. This last element helps to get out of the predominant centre-periphery perspective.

Declarations

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.