

Review of: "“Healing is having faith in Allah, the healer, and the medicine”: An exploratory qualitative study of Islamic-based healing practices in Northern Ghana"

Andrew Fournier¹

¹ Grand Canyon University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Thanks again for allowing me to review this study. The authors addressed my earlier questions. I wish them well with this article.

An exploratory study of such practices is worthy of publication, despite the small sample size. I believe the authors collected sufficiently rich data that provides avenues for future research.

I look forward to further research in this realm, particularly in the healers' use of traditional medicines. I wonder if relationships could be drawn between such medicines in other cultures, whether present or historical (e.g., early indigenous North American tribal medicines).