

Review of: "The Shortage of Professionals/Skilled Workers: Its Impact on the Inflation Rate in the Eurozone"

Alexandros Karakitsios¹

¹ Athens University of Economics and Business

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The paper analyses a very interesting topic of the labour markets, especially in the Eurozone. Indeed, the labour market shortness is expected to push wages, and consequently, prices upwards.

However, I believe that policy-related explanations should be further analyzed. It would be extremely interesting to find out possible reasons for the non-positive relationship between shortness and inflation. I think that there are some reasons related to the labour market institutions that have not been explained.