Reviewer's Comment (Manuscript ID: PDA1K8)

I appreciate the effort that has been made to perform the study. Specific comments and recommendations for this manuscript are as follows:

The narration of the subject should be started with general statements and then progressed towards more detailed information. The manuscript shouldn't give constant general information throughout the text. In general, the manuscript should be more structured in terms of text flow. Please write longer paragraphs rather than single sentences and try to create a full-content text. The contribution that has been made to the literature should be emphasized more.

There is a massive amount of evidence in the literature stating the bidirectional relationship between periodontitis and diabetes mellitus. The background and the importance of the two diseases should be more detailed, citing more representative studies in the references along with comprehensive information.

It is highly recommended to the author to make the written language of the manuscript better and fluent, also to avoid repetitive statements. The manuscript and the table should be more plain, brief, and clearer without any unnecessary details. There are some typos that need to be corrected. The type font and style should be the same in all parts of the manuscript, more ordered and harmonious (see references).
