

Review of: "Post-Pandemic Reflections from Sub-Saharan Africa: What We Know Now That We Wish We Knew Then"

Brian Chiluba¹

¹ University of Zambia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article references various experiences and observations, but it would strengthen the argument if more specific data and evidence were provided to support the assertions made. For instance, including statistics on vaccine refusal rates, economic impacts, or the effectiveness of specific public health measures would enhance the credibility of the article. While the article discusses the experiences of Nigeria and Uganda, it would be valuable to include more examples or case studies from other sub-Saharan African countries to provide a more comprehensive understanding of the regional context. This could contribute to a more nuanced discussion of the diversity within the continent. The article briefly touches upon policy recommendations but could elaborate on specific actionable suggestions for policymakers and public health officials. Providing detailed, practical recommendations would enhance the article's utility for decision-makers in the field. To strengthen the article's robustness, consider addressing potential counterarguments or alternative perspectives. Acknowledging differing viewpoints and presenting a balanced discussion would contribute to the overall credibility of the article.