The theme is relevant; however, the following points should be taken into consideration:

- Greater rigor in writing;
- Use the third person;
- Ideas should be more effectively articulated, avoiding overly long sentences;
- The literature review should be based on more recent authors;
- Do not include citations in the abstract;
- The methodological approach should be explicit;
- The study conclusions should be further developed and assertive.

If these considerations have been taken into account, it is considered that the article, given the addressed theme, may have potential.
