Treat to read this paper. It runs smoothly and stands on methodologically sound ground. However, I feel there is a need to explain a little more about the categories of coping strategies (religion, self-blame, substance abuse etc.) for the readers who are not from a psychological background. Further, there is ample evidence that there is a high level of anxiety and stress amongst medical students from all across the globe. Then, what was the need for this study to prove? Authors need to respond to this query too.
