

Review of: "Strengthening Healthcare in Bangladesh: Challenges and Pathways to Equity and Quality"

Tanvir Hossen

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

It is not clear to me whether the author has followed a clear methodology other than reviewing different published sources. The type of study on which this write-up is based must be explained alongside the tools used. If it is research, these are mandatory requirements, I believe. Otherwise, the insights generated can be applied to any healthcare system in the world. To find out the specific issues of a healthcare system and propose probable recommendations, one needs a deeper understanding. The Bangladesh healthcare system, especially in terms of primary healthcare services, is discrepant in urban and rural settings. It would be great if the author deep-dived and came up with a simple and self-explanatory skeleton of this system showing these discrepancies. The author can conduct in-depth interviews to generate these evidence.