The proposed topic is interesting, as is the presented model, but the reference to developing countries is weak. Why are these systems so different in developed and developing countries? what kind of differences do we have? Identifying such differences can be very significant and may actually be important for further research. Fortunately, the author seems to be aware of this, because in the summary he proposes directions for further research. The article definitely requires supplementation and extension with empirical research. The presentation of the model itself is very clear.
