The issues discussed in the article are interesting and provide a lot of technical information about the system. There is little mention of the concepts of crime and the types of crime in a given area. The article presents a lot of technical information about the problem undertaken. In the reviewer's opinion, there are no references to proven, similar systems that are used by similar entities in other countries. When considering the problem systemically, you should ask yourself: Is the system too complicated? Can it be used by other entities? How will its potential users process the information? Is the system understandable and readable? This document is technical. It is worth analysing similar systems used by similar units in other countries. I consider the topic to be original and offer many opportunities for further research.
