

Review of: "Establishing a Multi-disciplinary Adult Oncology Unit at Muhimbili National Hospital: Lessons Learned, Challenges, and Opportunities Amidst Tanzania's Growing Cancer Burden"

Sathish Thirunavukkarasu<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Emory University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This case study provides valuable insights into the restructuring of a multi-disciplinary adult oncology unit in Tanzania using a robust methodology. Here are a few minor comments for the authors to consider:

1. Did the quality of patient care and patient outcomes improve after the restructuring was implemented?
2. Consider conducting qualitative research to gather feedback from both providers and patients on the restructuring process.
3. Discussion: It would be beneficial to present similar restructuring models implemented in other countries, especially those in low- and middle-income settings. Comparing and contrasting approaches could provide a broader context for the study's findings.
4. Include a discussion on the cost implications of the restructuring. Understanding the financial aspects will contribute to a more thorough analysis of the feasibility and sustainability of the implemented changes.
5. The title mentions "challenges and opportunities," but these aspects are less elaborated upon in the text.