Very interesting article dealing with a timely issue. However, it should be written in a more scientific format in order to be considered for publication. The abstract is too long while "Introduction" lacks references; actually it lacks literature review. The article seems to be a report reproducing national goals and reports while the text should be condensed in order to be more cohesive. Moreover, there should be a well-formulated research question, a clear presentation of the problem under study and the adopted methodology, a "Discussion" section addressing the contribution of the study to existing literature/policies/policy implementation and a "Conclusions" section. Thanks to the author for this thorough analysis. Good luck!
