

Review of: "Theorizing the Normalization of Plantation Agriculture in Colombia"

George T. Mudimu

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article is well structured, empirically and theoretically strong. Some suggestions for improvement: it may be crucial to show the reactions of the marginalised people to these plantations. What are the relations and operations of social movements in Colombia in relation to wider struggles of agrarian justice in the region? Considering that Colombia has a new government now, are there any significant changes towards plantations? It may also be pertinent to check out some literature here:

Oliveira, G. D. L., & Schneider, M. (2016). The politics of flexing soybeans: China, Brazil and global agroindustrial restructuring. The Journal of Peasant Studies, 43(1), 167-194.

Vergara-Camus, L., & Kay, C. (2017). Agribusiness, peasants, left-wing governments, and the state in Latin America: An overview and theoretical reflections. Journal of Agrarian Change, 17(2), 239-257.

Monjane, B., & Bruna, N. (2019). Confronting agrarian authoritarianism: dynamics of resistance to PROSAVANA in Mozambique. Critical Agrarian Studies, 313.