- The article is interesting as it has a new perspective on consideration for older people with diabetes. However, I failed to understand the aim of the article as it did not state it clearly. I believe that it will read well if the authors provide the main objective of the article along with several smaller objectives leading to the main objective.
- Harmful language used such as 'diabetic' instead of people with diabetes, "older people are complex.." without providing context. "As these patients are complex..."; patients are not complex but their conditions are due to co-morbidities
- No citations were provided in the introduction
- Conclusions can be elaborated and I felt that the conclusion was disconnected from the introduction.
