

Review of: "Who Is Responsible for Preventing Children's Sexual Harassment?"

M.L.F. Kumalasari<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> UIN Sunan Ampel Surabaya

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Overall, the article lays a solid foundation by identifying responsibility models across various levels for preventing child sexual harassment. Further elaboration on specific strategies, challenges, and cultural considerations could enhance its depth and applicability in combating this critical issue.

However, to strengthen the article, it might benefit from a deeper exploration of specific strategies or interventions employed at each level of responsibility. Providing examples of successful prevention initiatives or programs could illustrate practical implications and offer guidance for potential implementation. Moreover, addressing challenges or limitations faced in implementing these responsibility models could enhance the article's credibility and practical relevance. It's essential to discuss obstacles faced by stakeholders or any gaps in the existing strategies that hinder effective prevention of child sexual harassment. Lastly, considering the cultural and societal nuances within Indonesia that might impact the effectiveness of these models could enrich the discussion. Cultural factors often play a significant role in shaping attitudes and behaviors related to such sensitive issues.