Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The topic of the study presented is very topical and very interesting. Your work helps to clarify the concept of decision making. Your work helps to emphasise how much this decision-making concept has an impact on the organisation's goals, objectives and other crucial political issues. Despite this, it lacks some methodological elements that would make the study of quality.

Below I have listed some points for improvement:

Abstract; The introduction, materials and methods, findings the conclusions of the study are not present.

Materials and methods section are not present. It is advisable to describe the methodology to make the research replicable, repeatable and robust, and follow best practices.

Results: These are presented in descriptive form at this time. It is advisable to organise and present them clearly through tables.

Discussion This section is not considered within the study. It is advisable to discuss the results presented, the limitations, the implications of these results for clinical practice, training, research and management.

Final Comments: major modification.
