This manuscript provides a relatively good overview of the role of information and communication technology in organizations and covers topics such as resource planning, acquisition, deployment, monitoring, maintenance, and management. But in the case of the current manuscript, the following are noteworthy:

1. It seems that referring to practical examples (case studies) will impress the audience more and increase the effectiveness of this manuscript.
2. It is better to use a critical approach in the discussion section and to discuss the interaction between the findings and the existing literature, pointing out the contradictions and their consequences in this field.
3. It seems that using graphs and tables to summarize the findings is effective and attracts more audiences.
4. It is recommended to review the text of the manuscript again to check for spelling and grammatical errors.
