Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Strengths:

- Strong foundation: You clearly establish the importance of banks and the heightened scrutiny they face.
- Literature review: You effectively highlight the existing research on bank performance determinants.
- Research gap: You convincingly identify the gaps your study aims to address (focusing on Asian markets, diverse economies, robust dataset, and using sGMM).
- Significance: You emphasize the value of your research in enriching the existing knowledge.
- Structure: The introduction lays out the upcoming sections logically.
- English proficiency: The grammar and vocabulary are excellent.

Areas for Improvement:

- Novelty: While the focus on Asian markets is a strength, consider elaborating on a more specific research question within the identified gap. Is there a particular determinant you find under-researched in this context?
- Highlighting the "so what" factor: You can strengthen the introduction by elaborating on the practical implications of your research. How can understanding bank performance determinants in diverse Asian economies benefit policymakers, investors, or the banking sector itself?
