This is good work, and your title is convincing. However, you need to address the following concerns to make it better and publishable.

1. Abstract: The introduction is too big, the Methods are not clear on the current study, the Results are not clear, and the purpose of the study remains obscured. "Overall, this review highlights the significant impact of dental infections and resistance on global health, including increased morbidity and mortality rates and rising healthcare costs." The readers would benefit if estimates were well-defined precisely.
2. Qualify this statement:
"One of the major concerns regarding dental infections is their contribution to the spread of antibiotic resistance," or replace it with "a contributor to the development of antibiotic resistance."
3. Such statements should be cited. "These conditions affect a staggering 20-50% of the global population and are the primary cause of tooth loss."
4. "These findings highlight the urgent need for improved oral health education and access to preventative care in these regions." Where are the findings? The findings should tell us our past, current, and future perspectives on dental infections versus AMR.
5. After reviewing your work, detailed methods, results/findings, and discussion are missing; therefore, you need to address them to proceed with the publication.
6. Some citations do not support the statements in your work (references 1 & 2), and others are not free to access. Make it clear in your methods how you accessed such articles.
