

Review of: "Alas (Hellas), there is no hope: It's not a crisis, it's a culture"

Moumita Basu

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article titled "Alas (Hellas), there is no hope: It's not a crisis, it's a culture" deals with the qualitative theoretical construct of the combination of features that lay dormant, in the manner that they are not prioritized, or maybe even perceived, as threats and issues against the effectiveness and prudence of the Hellenic economy. The study includes aspects of culture, within structural inefficiencies of the Hellenic society, as well as traits of the external environment that influence the Greek case.

The author gives a comprehensive description of the problems faced by the Greek economy. However, the article does not have any structured mathematical model with theoretical foundation or data analysis incorporating empirical verification. The author can think about this.